The Beyster Fellowships

for the study of employee ownership, profit sharing, and broad-based stock options in the corporation and society

The Beyster Fellows Program at Rutgers University invites applications for the J. Robert Beyster Fellowships and Related Fellowships. These fellowships will be awarded for the 2010-2011 academic year to outstanding PhD candidates or post-doctoral scholars in the areas of economics, history, management, business and labor relations, law, philosophy, psychology, public policy, and sociology studying employee ownership and related ideas such as profit sharing and broad-based stock options in the corporation and society in the United States. The fellowship would permit the student to associate with several scholars engaged in this area of research at Rutgers and receive mentoring and support.

The Beyster Visiting Professorship and Fellowship will support a scholar currently holding a faculty position with a stipend of $25,000.

The Beyster Post Doctoral Fellowship will support pre-tenure scholars and recent Ph.D. graduates with a stipend of $25,000.

Two Beyster Graduate Fellowships will support Ph.D. students who are initiating or completing a thesis with stipends of $25,000.

Related Fellowships

The Smiley Fellowship will support a predoctoral or postdoctoral scholar in the area of history in the amount of $5,000.

The Smiley Economic History Fellowship will support a predoctoral or postdoctoral scholar in economic history in the amount of $5,000.

Several Rutgers Graduate Fellowships will support Ph.D. students who are initiating or completing a thesis, each, in the amount of $12,500.

An Undergraduate Research Fellowship will support an undergraduate student conducting research in this area in the amount of $1000.
