Course Overview

Democracy is in crisis in many nations and increasingly problematic in the U.S. In this class we'll explore the relationship of labor organizations to democratic practices and principles. We'll ask: what can labor organizations and other progressive social movements do to defend democracy? What is meant by democracy anyway in politics or in society more broadly?

Students will be introduced to workers' collective action as a worldwide phenomenon that has been central to the political economic development of capitalist democracies. The course emphasizes how countries' unique histories and their institutional contexts have shaped both the political opportunities for workers' evolving collective action and the effects that such social mobilization has had on the relationship between capitalism and democracy.

With reference to two centuries of transatlantic history, the class covers both key political achievements of the working class as well as labor's contemporary challenges.

Policies

Attendance and participation

Be prepared for class and always read the assigned materials before our meetings. You are expected to bring questions and comments about the course material so that you can participate in class discussions. With much of our time spent learning through discussion, it is necessary for everybody to participate. I might ask students to use their questions to stimulate discussions and will ensure broad participation. It is critical that we respect one another's thoughts and address our comments at others' ideas, not at people themselves. This course is not a forum for demeaning or threatening language. Rather than measuring the frequency with which you speak in class, your participation grade reflects how you balance reasoning, reading, and listening. Also, do not forget to take careful notes to complement my PowerPoint slides.

Students should plan to attend every course session. If for some unavoidable reason you must miss a class, please let me know in advance through the university's absence reporting website (<https://sims.rutgers.edu/ssra/>) so that your absence will not remain unexplained. If you are late or leave early repeatedly, and if you miss class unexcused, your participation grade will suffer.

Late work

Late work is accepted in this course, but is penalized. Assignments lose 10% of the overall possible grade for each day late, starting at midnight. (Thus, if a paper is due on Monday at 11:59PM, and you turn it in Tuesday morning, grading would start at 90%.) After five days late, the late assignment is no longer accepted and will receive a "o."

Extensions on late work will be given only with prior arrangement with the professor, and only in extreme situations.

Turning in assignments

No physical documents are accepted in this class; all assignments must be submitted via the official Canvas course website. No submission of any other kind is accepted: for example, no emailed submission will be accepted; no submission via the "submission comments" box in the Canvas assignment; etc. Documents must be submitted in the proper format: as documents ending in .doc or .docx

Any assignments not submitted correctly will receive a "o." It is the student's sole responsibility to ensure that a document is submitted in the proper format that is readable by the professor. Students who submit assignments that cannot be opened and read by the professor are marked as missing and will receive a "o."

Intellectual property

Lectures and materials utilized in this course, including but not limited to videocasts, podcasts, visual presentations, assessments, and assignments, are protected by United States copyright laws as well as Rutgers University policy. As the instructor of this course, I possess sole copyright ownership. You are permitted to take notes for personal use or to provide to a classmate also currently enrolled in this course. Under no other circumstances is distribution of recorded or written materials associated with this course permitted to any internet site or similar information-sharing platform without my express written consent. Doing so is a violation of the university's Academic Integrity Policy.

As the instructor for this course, I have the responsibility to protect students' right to privacy. Classroom recordings of students will therefore be treated as educational records under the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), the U.S. federal law that governs access to educational information and records. Instructors and students must provide notification if any part of sessions are to be recorded, and such recordings cannot be circulated outside the course.

Artificial Intelligence

No use of Artificial Intelligence is permitted in this course, and its use will be considered plagiarism in violation of the policy on academic integrity. Students are expected to generate and submit original, personally composed tasks for each assignment. The use of Artificial Intelligence to create and submit work under the guise of original work is not acceptable.

Academic integrity

While I encourage students to work together to understand theories and concepts, all written work must be your own. If you cite an author or use his/her ideas, please cite properly. Plagiarized assignments or evidence of cheating will result in a failing grade in the assignment and possibly in the course. Moreover, plagiarism may result in disciplinary action by the university.

Disability statement

Rutgers University welcomes students with disabilities into all of the University's educational programs. In order to receive consideration for reasonable accommodations, a student with a disability must contact the appropriate disability services office at the campus where you are officially enrolled, participate in an intake interview, and provide documentation.

If the documentation supports your request for reasonable accommodations, your campus's disability services office will provide you with a Letter of Accommodations. Please share this letter with your instructors and discuss the accommodations with them as early in your courses as possible. To begin this process, please complete the Registration form on the ODS web site at: <https://ods.rutgers.edu/students/registration-form>.
